

Abused and neglected children who are removed from their homes need Dallas CASA (Court Appointed Special Advocate) volunteers.

Trained and supervised by Dallas CASA, volunteer advocates help our judges make the best decisions for children living in protective care, whether that means returning home, being adopted by relatives or another loving family, or remaining in foster care.

A volunteer also makes a profound difference in the life of a child by advising our judges whether educational, medical, and emotional needs are being met while a child remains in protective care.

In a time of unthinkable upheaval, the Dallas CASA volunteer may become a child's most constant and caring adult contact.

Imagine the impact you can have and perhaps you will understand why Dallas CASA volunteers find the experience so rewarding.

The thing I tell other people is that I've done different volunteer opportunities but that this is the one thing I've done where I can say I've truly made a difference. More often than not, you see something happen with the children that shows you how exhausted the system is and how crucial your presence is in each case. – Larry D., CASA volunteer since 1997

The constant thought that runs through my head is that, although we can't change a child's past, we can change their future. We can show them that adults can be trusted and remind them that they aren't to blame for what happened to them. And we can teach them that someone cares about each of them." – Sandra S., CASA volunteer since 2002
